About The Des Moines Catholic Worker and The Rachel Corrie Project

The Rachel Corrie Project is an effort by The Des Moines Catholic Worker (DMCW) to train everyday people in third party nonviolent intervention and solidarity models and place them with peace teams in armed conflict zones overseas, as well as to provide a sanctuary for returning international solidarity activists.

DMCW members have traveled in Latin America and the Middle East with groups like Christian Peacemaker Teams, Witness For Peace, Justicia y Paz, and the International Solidarity Movement.

The Des Moines Catholic Worker is interested in conducting more training and placing more community members in short and long-term stints to global hot spots.

The Des Moines Catholic Worker community's major program is the running of a drop-in center, soup kitchen, and house of hospitality on the near northside of Iowa's capital city, Des Moines. We also practice nonviolent resistance, prophetic witness, and speaking truth to power. The Rachel Corrie Project is an intentional effort to expand the scope of our work and broaden our ministry.

"I feel like I'm witnessing the systematic destruction of a people's ability to survive. It's horrifying."

- RACHEL CORRIE
